

acij

australian centre for independent journalism

The Australian Centre for Independent Journalism is proud to be associated with Pacific Journalism Review

The Australian Centre for Independent Journalism (ACIJ) is a Journalism Research Centre attached to the University of Technology, Sydney. The ACIJ is fully committed to the principle that democratic societies require independent, critical and investigative journalism of the highest standard.

The ACIJ's mission is to support this principle as actively and broadly as possible. The ACIJ pursues a broad and comprehensive strategy in supporting and developing high standards of independent journalism as well as educational and professional development.

The centre has a long interest in and association with journalism in the Pacific region. Examples of recent projects include:

2003

Public Right to Know Conference – including papers relevant to Pacific media
George Munster Forum – Reporting the Asia-Pacific Region (Sidney Myer Centre, Melbourne)

2002

Newsworthy – large research project tackled the Australian media's coverage of humanitarian, aid and development issues. (Commissioned by AusAid).

1995-2001

Various Pacific journalism education initiatives in association with AusAid

University of Technology, 755 Harris Street, Ultimo NSW.
PO Box 123, Broadway NSW 2007, Sydney, Australia
Ph: +61 2 9514 2488 Fax: +61 2 9281 2976 email: acij@uts.edu.au
Website: www.journalism.uts.edu.au/acij/

